If you do not know mushrooms, or if there is a doubt in your mind, it is far better not to eat those which grow wild in the woods, or elsewhere.

Don't take a chance on eating the poisonous kind, say Extension specialists at V. P. I.

It is not safe to eat the young, unopened "button" mushrooms, as it is hard to tell the difference between the poisonous and the non-poisonous species at this stage of development.

Mushrooms, which are said to help you get the difference between the poisonous and the edible kind, the specialists say. It is not true, that mushrooms poisonous if boiled with silver spoons, or that it is equally safe to eat those that grow on certain kinds of trees. Neither boiling potatoes with mushrooms in salt water will not make them safe to eat, nor will any other test which are equally unreliable.

You can save time frying bacon by crisscrossing the slices and turning them all at once with a pancake turner. Cooks more at a time, too.

If a lukewarm soaking is necessary to warm stove meat, put it in a heavy skillet and cover completely with water. Simmer, keeping cover on tight lid and heat in a moderate oven. Tastes as good as if it had been cooked right after cooking.

CHRISTMAS TREES CAN BE SOLD BY U. S. GRADES THIS WINTER

For the first time, Christmas trees, can be harvested and sold this year on the basis of federally standardized grades.

This offers possibilities for better returns to growers for good quality trees, say specialists at VPI.

U. S. Grade standards, developed at the request of state and national Christmas tree associations, became effective November 1. Grading will be voluntary and inspection service will be provided for a moderate fee by the Department of Agriculture at all major shipping points and terminal markets. Grades will include: U. S. Premium, U. S. No. 1, and U. S. No. 2. Trees that can't qualify for any of these grades will be listed as culls.

In the past many growers have sold their trees in random lots, just as a whole field was harvested, the VPI specialists say. Dealers could not pay too high for such lots since at times they contained as much as 50% culls. Grading will be made possible for growers to command a better price for batches of high quality trees, and it will protect dealers from taking a loss on cull trees mixed in with better ones.

Also in harvesting, it will be possible for growers to select trees that will bring better prices and leave the others for later harvest either for the Christmas trade or other purposes.

More detailed information on grades is available from the Fruit and Vegetable Division, Agricultural Marketing Service, U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, 25, D. C.

NEWS FOR VETERANS

A crack Veterans Affairs Auxiliary choral group will make its first public appearance away from its Denver headquarters on Monday morning, November 11, when it will take part in a Veterans Day ceremony at Arlington National Cemetery.

Ever since the end of World War I, nearly 10 years ago, homage has been paid to the Unknown Soldier on November 11 — first when the day was known as Armistice Day, and in more recent years when it was changed by Act of Congress to Veterans Day.

Hundreds of feet below the surface of Wellicks, Poland, there is a post office in a salt mine.

Come out to Appomattox this Friday night. Local stores will have Open House.
